1. The Montreal Screwjob

The Montreal Screwjob is perhaps the most infamous wrestling plan of all time. At the 1997 Survivor Series pay-per-view, Bret Hart was scheduled to defeat Shawn Michaels and win the WWF Championship. However, Vince McMahon changed the plans at the last minute and had Michaels win the title instead. Hart was furious and left the WWF shortly after.

2. The Invasion

In 2001, the WWF and WCW merged in a storyline called The Invasion. The plan was for the two companies to feud with each other, with the WWF ultimately winning. However, the storyline was a disaster and was quickly abandoned.

3. The Katie Vick storyline

In 2004, Triple H and Kane feuded with each other over the custody of a young girl named Katie Vick. The storyline was controversial and was criticized for being tasteless and offensive.

4. The Nexus invasion

In 2010, a group of NXT rookies invaded Raw and attacked John Cena. The Nexus was originally supposed to be a dominant force in the WWE, but the storyline was quickly abandoned.

5. The Undertaker vs. Mankind Hell in a Cell match

The Undertaker and Mankind's Hell in a Cell match at the 1998 King of the Ring pay-per-view is one of the most brutal matches in wrestling history. The match was originally supposed to be a standard Hell in a Cell match, but it was changed to a "Falls Count Anywhere" match at the last minute.

The match was full of violence and ended with Undertaker throwing Mankind off the top of the cell.

These are just a few of the most shocking wrestling plans that have actually happened. In the world of professional wrestling, anything is possible, and often the most unbelievable plans are the ones that actually come to fruition.
